

XM radio is here to stay. It should give its subscribers the same services regular radio provides. Since the service is a subscription I don't see why another medium should have any say in how XM runs its business.